Our conference is focused on the Control and Automation application in Manufacturing, Process Control and critical infrastructure, many companies and organisations across Ireland will attend to learn options and steps they can take to protect themselves from the increasing threat posed by Cyber criminals and the damage they can do if they breach security and gain access to the control systems in their plants.

International Experienced Speakers - Major Control System Vendors Cybersecurity Experts – Practical Solutions from the users perspective - Protect the SCADA / DCS Applications

The conference aims to:

Reveal how to design for cybersecurity, detect threats, and mitigate the risks and exposure to production plant systems and networks

Introduce proven industrial control systems security standards and practices and demonstrate how to apply them

Showcase best practices utilized in various industries and highlight peer experiences and lessons learned

As well as threats from external sources you also need to take steps to protect your Control and Automation Systems from internal threats which can cripple a company for days, weeks or even months.

Cybersecurity

Cybersecurity for the industrial enterprise is quite different from cybersecurity for other areas. In enterprise security, whether for an office or even for a bank or credit card processor, the acronym, CIA, for confidentiality, integrity, availability is paramount and protecting the data in the servers is the first priority. In operations security, or industrial control security, the acronym is AIC. The first priority in a manufacturing situation is to keep the plant running (availability) with integrity and confidentiality if possible. ISA is the place you will find out how to use this difference to secure your plant.
